Vegetables and Sides

As cooks, we find our deepest inspiration in markets overflowing with beautiful, freshly picked produce. These ingredients are the beginning of meals that fully express a sense of place and season: tender Southern cream peas simmered with smoky bacon, potatoes gratin baked under a blanket of tangy Gruyère, or Thai-style green beans spiced with chiles and fish sauce. Call them side dishes if you like, but we know full well that these vibrant vegetables are good enough to take center stage.
